Interviews with Doctors at SUNY School of Medicine 12/1/71, 9-12 a.m.

Barry - He was found [illegible] was interested a bit a few things that Ron tried to avoid. One most important of these is his repeated statement that when he first saw the wound in the autopsy room he used a probe he retrieved from a "brain tray" (I think) took a quick look at the wound, wiped it off and started cutting. He said both times that the edges were frayed "as if they were cut". When I asked if he had ever been asked about this significant fact, he flushed and tried to explain that there was blood around the edges. I didn't press, & what he said can't be true — and if Ron had edited the tapes to begin with it did not after his briefing.

He is a hunter, loves it as a form of physical release, his family is fond of the meat, went deer hunting last week (got nothing but his 11 year-old son had a shot at one), and is thoroughly familiar with the various kinds of ammo. He handloads his own. Discussed varmint ring bullet, controlled expansion, etc, and what happens if both of you shoot with accuracy and velocity.

He was called in on Connally ("by the FBI") because this is an expert on (he corrected me by saying "use" & I misunderstood, thinking he meant the wounding action) entrance injury. The reason is because the other autopsy noted the proximity of the wound on the thigh to an artery. He then saw and examined the wound with care. It was too small for a bullet. He described how that fragment was from the X-ray, and said it was not possible that a bullet had caused it and then broken out. He showed me with his fingers that the fragment was less than a half inch under the skin and that it had gone about 3-3½" after penetration. No danger to artery so not removed, which he says is usual in such cases. He also said that it could have been there from childhood and not been remembered. I asked "with out leaving a scar?" And he said it was so small it need not have. So we talked about this 399 stuff he came to realize what he was really saying, & I

2/ mo. → told him the father report also attributed that wound to a fragment.

He volunteered during this discussion that there was fragmentation in the wrist showing on the X-ray and noted on agreement when I told him he is going a shrapnel had struck the wrist there will be documented as missing from 399.

The bruise on the ~~bruising~~ pleura would not have been caused by the patch. He volunteered several ~~times~~ times that witness of the aut. doctors (When, Lawrence did he asked that it be off the wound) Here he seemed to take it as a professional reflection on himself. He said that they never cause chest bruising in adults and have to be exceedingly careful to avoid it with children. He said he had wondered if it had been caused by a fragment or the force of fragmentation.

He said the autopsy is wrong in attributing the chest ~~in~~ injuries to subcutaneous emphysema. He used both hands and gestured to each breast. He added that no tube was used for a "closed thoracotomy"

Says transcript his 11/22 remarks shows he was wrong, but he admits that Harmon did understand him to have described skin as an entrance wound. He still says he did not know which.

Admits they were shown photos but doesn't recall whether by FBI or SS, before testimony.

We had a long and private discussion during which I told him some of the new things I had discovered, I invited him to come and see what I am now here told him what the pathologist & the Parkland witnesses were in confidence - and he repeated what he had said ~~earlier~~ earlier, that if "government" would do such a thing, he was "terrified" I told him "you should be terrified."

On the head wound, I discussed the bottom of

5 MO)

[illegible] fragment struck in the right front and he agreed it could not have been from a rotating round. At first he tried to argue that it could have been from a controlled [illegible] round, I pointed out the W/C diagrams in both Bullet rotating round & agreed the purposes of the entire experiment was & the design. He agreed, & he agreed this would be the end of the W/C. He also said it was inconsistent with what he would expect from a tumbling round and then described the explosion of one recently when he had shot a prairie dog. He seemed to be saying that the explosion of the head would have been caused by an entering explosion, but this is not explicit.

He described Dr Rose as "abrasive" & "somewhat abrasive" but an excellent forensic pathologist. When I tried to push for Rose's indignation & contempt 11/22/63 he agreed that Rose had cause for his bitter feelings but he also made clear that Rose was abrasive. He also agreed, as did all those docs, that had Rose performed the autopsy, the Kennedy gunshot wounds would not have [illegible]

12/1/71 McC/Lelland in his office, D614-1, just before operation at Presbyterian Hospital (Warren Hall, John Perry)

When I asked him about statement he remembered it well and began by saying it was a total mistake on my part." We discussed this in a while. He said that "grassy knoll" statement had called the spot to his attention. I pointed out that it was his function to answer, not ask questions. That the asking was Specter's job, and that when he had said there was a wound on the left temple, Specter should have set the record straight. I also pointed out that Specter had asked him if he had said anything he would like to change and he had not changed this. He was without explanation of the omission or his failure to change it "a total mistake." He then shifted to this position: "I don't know that it wasn't and I don't know that it was," from which I shifted to "I presume it was a wrong assumption." He volunteered at some length about Garrison's men, describing Garrison as a gay hippie, and seemed pleased that he had talked them out of calling him as a witness. When I asked him if he or anyone else had wiped the spot, presumably of blood, away, he said "no". And when I pointed out that in his later sworn testimony (6 H 48) Jenkins had testified to the existence of this left temple wound, he had no explanation. McC was quite bitter about Garrison and Lane, but he was without complaint about Specter and the Warren Commission, who built & preserved an inaccurate record if this seeming misrepresentation is to be credited. He seemed also to be unaware of this strange public position in which he was not critical of those he in effect now says caused the error but is quite critical of those who ignore the record accurately

12/1/71 Dr Chas Carrico now associate, staff in surgery, Parkland
Met Groglow in Navy. Crossed at anat dept. Conf.
Boston gone since 1965-6. For Hunch Clifte see Doris Nelson, emergency room chief nurse.
Wound above collar and definitely in right side. He saw only with body prone
Saw no wound left temple
Clothes cut off by nurses while he did his own emergency work, which precluded watching them. Folded back, used to cut off tie under collar & top shirt - speed essential. Used to cut tie a single thickness would pull out, not to cut through knot. Thinks likely when O described neck in tie not & shirt in shirt front that's what made when cutting tie
Ran hands down both sides of back, S.O.P. to be sure no large wound in back
Not use to cut clothes in access as fast as possible
Kemp Clark still there but gone both times O stopped off at his office (7th flr)
Wright still Chief Security but out until 2 p.m. (Kennan is, I think) office in Hospital, ground flr, I. E., below what is 1st main entrance.

Carrico again. I asked him if he recalled Dallas' question about bullet in & he said as he had with Dulles, pointing with his fingers to a spot a little above the collar. But he knew did what he did not with Dulles, qualified by saying he saw the body prone only.
